Postdoctoral Fellowship in Adult Gastrointestinal Health Psychology

The Adult Section of the Department of Psychiatry & Behavioral Neuroscience at the University of Chicago is offering a one-year postdoctoral fellowship in Adult Gastrointestinal Health Psychology (Psychogastroenterology). A successful candidate will spend 80% of time in clinical work and associated responsibilities, including the treatment of adult individuals with gastrointestinal (GI) disorders, such as irritable bowel syndrome, gastroesophageal reflux disease, and inflammatory bowel disease. The fellow may also work with patients with comorbid sexual or mental health concerns, depending on the fellow’s interest and the nature of clinic referrals. Twenty percent may be devoted to scholarly endeavors including research and program development.

The fellow will have two hours of individual supervision per week, and will participate in a group psychogastroenterology didactic seminar. The fellow may also choose to attend didactics with other psychology and psychiatry trainees within the department.

The development of clinical, educational, and research skills in a multidisciplinary environment will prepare the fellow for a career in an academic medical center as a health psychologist. Please note that your university-based graduate program in health service psychology and your doctoral psychology internship must be accredited by the American Psychological Association. Stipend: $56,484

Fringe Benefits: Subsidized health, dental, and vision insurance, 15 days vacation, 5 days professional time off, 10 sick/wellness days

Application: Our program requires a CV, cover letter, and an unofficial transcript.

References: We require three letters of recommendation, which may be emailed directly to Dr. Bedell. If you are on internship and your internship Training Director (TD) is not one of your letter writers, we require a separate letter from your Internship Training Director (TD) indicating that you are on track to complete the internship program. If your TD is one of your existing references, this issue may be addressed in the recommendation letter.

One letter of recommendation should be from your academic advisor/dissertation chair who should speak to the status of your dissertation in the letter.

Please email your materials to Alyse Bedell, PhD (bedell1@bsd.uchicago.edu).

Applications are due immediately and will be reviewed on a rolling basis until the position are filled.
